REUTER's telegram stating that the Chinese Peace Embassy has left Japan disposes of the last ray of hope that something might still be done by CHAN and SHAO, with the assistance of Mr. Fosner, their American Lity of limiting the number of public houses adviser, towards arranging a settlement. On the arrival of the Envoys at Hiroshima it of the last half century in the Far East, together | was found that their credentials were fatally | sold, so long as the traffic is in private bands, | with the Texts of all the most important Treaties defective and powerless. A telegram was, however, sent to them at Nagasaki by their Government directing them to remain at that port pending the receipt of credentials which might be acceptable to the Jupanese. This looked as if the Emperor's advisérs were sincerely desirous United States Extradition Treaty, 1886, of peace and were acting in good faith, and hopes of a successful issue of the mission were revived. These hopes have, unfortion. tunately, been dissipated, and the Embassy has now definitely failed. The particular spot where the orimo was enacted is most favourable for the commission of a crime of this sort and for the easy escape of the murderer. Running for a considerable distance along the Macdonnel Road are a large number of godowns and on the opposite side is the military ground where the barracks are situated. It is quite certain that the murderer must have escaped into the barracks, for after the shot and a loud cry of the wounded man were heard, only a few seconds slapsed ere Mr. Wilcockson and the dockyard officials were on the scene. As they came from opposite directions they could not possibly have missed the murderer if he had run along the road. It would only take three seconds for the colorit to seam perover the rough turf leading to the military barracks. He would then be safely hidden from view amount the trees, and could without any difficulty reach the barracks again. On the arrival of the police a thorough search of the ground was made with the sid of lamps for the courderer's weapon, and Colone Barrow personally conducted a search of the barracks, but the revolver was not found. The murderer must have placed the mouth the weapon quite close to the deceased, and at the left side of his back, as the victim's coat and under shirt were singed. The bullet entered near the left side and came out just below the region of the heart. Beyond the statement of the deceased the police have, as yet, no ofne to work upon. It is said, however, that Nawab Shah owed the murdered man, who was the asssistant gymosatic Hongkong and lodged at the Central Police Station.
